The new Retouch settings panel is, by far, the most interesting change to the photo editing process. Rather than adding controls and options that are all related to Exposure, Vibrance, Saturation, Contrast, etc., you now add various image effects to your photos:

- Blur, Particle filter, and Lens Correction
- Sci-Fi, Retro, Sketch, and Gradient Mesh
- Liquify, Retro and Shimmer
- Warp, Color, Gradient, and Shadows/Highlights

Anyone can share a link to cloud documents, pull the link into other Photoshop applications (if you want) or use it with alternate software. Also, you can save a cloud document as a new document. Not in this version). Finally, there are a couple of new photo options in Lightroom, including the new Photo Formats settings and the new Retouch Settings panel. In a nutshell, these are the equivalent of the Exif settings in Photoshop, although the settings are changing constantly. I recommend taking a look at the new Photo Formats panel in Lightroom 5 if you want to learn more about those settings. I highly recommend this panel to anyone who wants to “undo” either a color effect, or the standard photographic setting of black and white. It’s also useful for re-establishing the transition between two images as an effect of the lens rather than by Photoshop. Among the highlights of the software update are:

- Easier way to select objects
- Squares and Curves are now included
- One-click Fill and Remove
- New Object Selection
- Live Picture Match
- New Live Filter
- Live Transform
