At the Ricoh Chennai last month, Enador here developed an innovative solution which showcased the value addition that can be brought by Adobe Photoshop CC and Adobe Sensei AI tools. The idea and concept behind this was to bring together the user's creativity and Google Drive , to create high fidelity prototypes. In this solution, multiple participants can create a model using a 'Prototyping Stage' on a virtual canvas, using Google Drive as a repository. While it is still in the initial phases, this application effectively serves the purpose of understanding what is required in the project through interaction of the stakeholders, in a very hands-on and real-time way. Almost all the team members involved are end-users and stakeholders for this application, which could further be scaled across other applications. To create a model, the user creates a new project in Google docs and then imports the project to Prototyping Stage where it can be adjusted using users specific tools. By using timelines, the user can fine tune the models, including colour, personality and occupation of the different assets depending on user preferences. Once the model is complete, it can be exported to the real-world, through Ethnous , the online multi-user platform from Enador. This, in turn, can be imported directly into a product in Photoshop. Once the approvals and approvals are collected from the end-users, a final model is then exported as a.pdf document which is directly imported back into the Photoshop application. All the approvals at each stage can be exported and signed in using Adobe Creative Cloud .
